PREFACE

This memorandum is part of a series of NTIA Technical Memorandums. Each publication describes a subjective experiment that is named in series and distributed freely on the Consumer Digital Video Library (CDVL, www.cdvl.org) for research and development purposes. These experiments provide training data for no-reference (NR) metrics that focus on consumer camera applications. The reader is expected to have some knowledge of subjective experiments. A tutorial on this subject can be found in “Video Quality Assessment: Subjective testing of entertainment scenes,” by Margaret H. Pinson, Lucjan Janowski, and Zdzislaw Papir, published in IEEE Signal Processing Magazine, January 2015.

The subjective image quality dataset and experiment described by this memorandum, referred to as the its4s2 experiment, was conducted according to ITU-T Rec. P.913 edition 2.0 (approved March 15, 2016). ITU-T Rec. P.913 is better suited for consumer camera applications than the renowned ITU-R Rec. BT.500. While ITU-R Rec. BT.500-13 recommends at least 15 subjects, ITU-T Rec. P.913 recommends at least 24 subjects in a controlled environment for greater quality of the study results. Due to experiment resource constraints, this memorandum includes data from only 16 subjects and must therefore be considered a pilot study.

Our intention is to collect data from additional subjects and make that subjective data available at a future time. Nomenclature will be added at that time, to distinguish between the partial data (from 16 subjects) and the full subjective data (from at least 24 subjects). The pilot study data is made available immediately, to assist related technical efforts being performed by industry, academia, and standards developing organizations.

ITS4S2: AN IMAGE QUALITY DATASET WITH UNREPEATED IMAGES FROM CONSUMER CAMERAS

Margaret H Pinson¹

This technical memorandum provides technical details for the image quality subjective experiment its4s2. This experiment contains 1,473 still images that were presented to subjects for 4 seconds each, as per still video. The goals are (1) to train no-reference (NR) metrics that track the image quality of consumer grade cameras, (2) to understand spatial characteristics of moving objects that have complex interactions with video codecs, such as water and confetti, and (3) to begin to identify any differences in rating behaviors depending on whether the images are used for entertainment purposes or by public safety practitioners for job related tasks. The dataset is freely available for research and development purposes.

Keywords: camera capture, image quality, no-reference metric, public safety, subjective testing, video quality

1. INTRODUCTION

Subjective image quality test its4s2 was designed to provide insights into no-reference (NR) metrics that evaluate camera capture. The images in the its4s2 dataset represent many topics digitally photographed with a variety of consumer grade cameras. The its4s2 dataset implements an experiment design with unrepeated scenes. Seventy-five percent of the images depict unique scenes, and 25% show the same scene photographed in two to three different ways. The images are organized by topic (e.g., disaster response, fireworks, snow sculpture) and impairment (e.g., fisheye lens, Bokeh effect). The goal is to characterize the entire camera capture pipeline: Sensor, image processing encoder, decoder, and display. The its4s2 dataset contains 1,473 digital images from amateur photographers, though some photographers self-report as professional. The images were obtained from Flickr®.

The its4s2 experiment was designed to:

- Train no-reference (NR) metrics that track the image quality of consumer grade cameras
- Portray spatial characteristics of moving objects that have complex interactions with video codecs, such as water and confetti
- Explore any differences in rating behaviors depending on whether the images are used for entertainment purposes or by public safety practitioners for job related tasks

This memorandum provides a technical description of the subjective experiment design and implementation. This memorandum also provides a brief analysis of the subjective ratings. Analyses of the video sequences will appear in separate publications (for example [1]), with only a brief summary of the experimental design. The its4s2 dataset has been made available on the Consumer Digital Video Library (CDVL, www.cdvl.org).

The its4s2 experiment is considered to be a pilot study due to the limited number of subjects involved in the experiment.

1.1 Background

This memorandum is part of a series of NTIA Technical Memorandums. Each publication describes a subjective experiment that is named in series and distributed freely on CDVL (www.cdvl.org) for research and development purposes. These experiments provide training data for NR metrics that focus on consumer camera applications. NR metrics trained on these datasets will be appropriate for assessing modern cameras and high performing networks. Suitable services include professional and amateur photography, broadcast television, adaptive video streaming, video surveillance, videoconferencing, and websites. Metrics trained on these datasets will be unsuitable for contribution quality video applications, where bit-rates are higher, impairments differ, and artistic intent must be considered.

The goal of an NR metric is to predict the quality of an image or video using only the image or video itself. That is, NR metrics examine pixels, not bit-streams or coding parameters, and NR metrics cannot refer to a higher quality version of the image or video. At Video Quality Experts Group (VQEG) meetings, industry has expressed an urgent need for NR video quality metrics. NR metric development has proven to be a very challenging development problem.

The its4s2 subjective image quality experiment builds upon a prior video quality subjective experiment, named its4s, which is summarized below. See [2] for details of the its4s experiment and our theory on subjective experiment designs that provide improved training data for NR metrics.

In summary, the its4s dataset was designed to demonstrate the impact of original video quality on mean opinion scores (MOS). The its4s dataset contains 813 unique video sequences, each 4 seconds in duration. Preliminary analyses of the its4s dataset (publication pending) indicated that the large variety of unique video content enables insights into NR metrics that conventional datasets do not. See Section 6 of [2] for an example.

The its4s experiment design had five new elements that diverged from the conventional design, as explained in the following five paragraphs. The dataset described in this document (its4s2) builds upon these elements to further diverge from the conventional experiment design.

First, the its4s dataset avoids scene reuse. Subjective tests that use this approach, where each subject views each source sequence only once, are referred to as “unrepeated scene experiment designs.” Dataset its4s used the related source sequence (RSRC) design presented in [3]. In a nutshell, a set of related source sequences (RSRC) is a set of visually similar content. The conventional experiment design is a full matrix of source sequences (SRC) and hypothetical reference circuits (HRC). The RSRC design replaces each SRC with a pool of media depicting similar subject matter. For example, one RSRC might contain ten different segments from a music video, each showing a wide shot of the whole band. The RSRC design provides superior understanding of camera capture problems, due to the increase in content variety.

Second, the its4s experiment used processed video sequences (PVS) that were divided into eight sessions, such that each session had a different theme. All sessions have similar characteristics (e.g., number of stimuli, range of quality). The change of themes and very short stimuli (4 seconds) reduced subject fatigue and helped subjects remain motivated through an experiment that was longer than conventional wisdom prescribes (2 to 3 hours vs 1 hour).

Third, the its4s experiment design contained a mixture of entertainment content (87.5%) and public safety content (12.5%). The public safety content contained some subject matter that might be polarizing or cause strong emotional responses, such as firearms and simulated wounds. The public safety content did not cause problems, despite the subjects being drawn from a pool of people from the community at large.

Fourth, the its4s experiment contains 24 original videos with fair quality or worse on the absolute category rating (ACR) scale, based in the experimenter’s assessment. The conventional experiment design recommends that all SRC must have quality good or better as judged by an expert (e.g., the experimenter). Inclusion of SRC with quality fair or worse is necessary to understand impairments stemming from the camera capture and the videographer’s actions. These low quality SRC are also necessary to understand the complex interactions between camera capture and operation impairments and the impairments that occur later after the camera capture (e.g., editing, transcoding to a lower bit-rate, format changes, network errors).

Fifth, the its4s subjects were asked to consider all aspects of quality when rating videos. By convention, subjects are asked to ignore the subject matter of the videos. Within its4s, that instruction was omitted; subjects were allowed to include aesthetics and subject matter in their ratings. Our theory (noted above and posed in [2]) is that scene reuse encourages subjects to make comparison ratings even within single stimulus tests. By using unrepeated scenes and omitting the instruction to ignore content, we hope to obtain ratings that will better reflect the NR metric user’s quality opinions.

The its4s dataset is severely limited in four ways. First, the dataset is too small (by itself) to train a robust NR metric. Second, the content was all professionally produced. Third, only about 3% of the video sequences were chosen for quality problems stemming from the camera capture or the videographer’s actions. Fourth, the test conditions, referred to as HRCs above, were extremely simplistic.

Analyses indicate that the its4s experiment design highlights problems of NR metrics that are not revealed by conventional datasets. The investigational design choices in its4s either did not cause problems or improved the subjects’ experience. Therefore, the its4s2 experiment design (presented in this memorandum) includes the five elements mentioned above, which are now considered trustworthy, and adds several new design elements, which are investigational.

1.2 Dataset Overview

The its4s2 experiment design adopts the strategy proposed by Saad and Corriveau [3]—simplify the NR problem by eliminating motion. In this regard, the its4s2 dataset was developed to provide insight into:

- Consumer cameras (e.g., smartphone, tablet, point-and-shoot, digital single-lens reflex (DSLR))
- Camera lenses (e.g., lens flare, fisheye lenses)
- Aspect ratio (which may differ from a typical digital monitor)
- Amateur photography (e.g., poor composition, lighting problems)²
- Task dependencies in evaluating image quality (entertainment vs public safety)
- Photographic vision (e.g., what the photographer wanted vs what the camera produced)
- Scenes involving one or more elements that, when moving, can cause complex interactions (e.g., water, confetti, wood floors, high contrast edges, rain)
- Objects and textures that can cause complex interactions with the human visual system

The its4s2 dataset diverges from the conventional experiment design in four ways. First, the sessions are intentionally unbalanced. Digital images are divided into sessions by topic and contributor. The consequence is that the average session MOS varies greatly. Second, the experiment design does not have a full matrix. Instead, images are loosely categorized into SRCs and HRCs using the characteristics for which images were selected. No attempt is made to balance these factors. Third, the dataset is extremely large. Some subjects may only rate a subset of the available sessions. The resulting imbalances in subject bias will be addressed via post-processing, as explained in Section 3. Fourth, the images are presented as still videos with 4 seconds duration. This allows an NR metric to train jointly on both the its4s and its4s2 datasets.

The conventional experiment design is intended for HRC comparisons. The conventional design eliminates unnecessary variables, implements a full matrix of SRCs and HRCs, and requires each subject to rate all stimuli. By contrast, the first three elements mentioned above produce an unbalanced experiment design. Thus, the its4s2 dataset is unsuitable for comparing and contrasting cameras.

2. EXPERIMENT DESIGN

2.1 Image Selection and Categorization

The its4s2 experiment's image selection and categorization are summarized below, then presented in a series of five tables.

All images have been categorized into the RSRC sets identified in Tables 1 and 2. Although there are some exceptions, generally each session has either digital images that typify entertainment camera capture (Table 1) or images that typify first responder camera capture (Table 2). These two tables have three columns: the RSRC set name, a short description of the content in that RSRC set, and our motivation for choosing this type of image. In several cases, the motivation column is intentionally omitted, marked with an em-dash (—). This means that content is merely typical of entertainment or public safety images (e.g., subject matter, location, focal distance, lighting, camera type). These images were chosen to highlight one or more aspects of the camera capture.

All images have also been categorized into the HRCs identified in Table 3. In some cases, the HRC is not an impairment, but rather a category of images chosen to help the user train an NR metric parameter with specific characteristics (e.g., a blur metric that does not penalize images with intentionally blurred backgrounds). Some images contain multiple impairments and so the dominant HRC was ambiguous. Table 3 has three columns: the HRC name, a short description of the HRC, and our motivation for choosing these images.

The images were then divided into sessions. Table 4 identifies the name of each session and gives a short description of the types of content in that session. Each session was organized around a different theme, in an effort to keep the subjects entertained. No attempt was made to equalize the quality of images between sessions, which is a notable deviation from the conventional experiment design. Basically, the sessions were a consequence of the image, RSRC, and HRC selection process.

The its4s2 experiment included two training sessions: one with entertainment content and one with public safety content. Each subject participated in each training session twice: once at the beginning of the experiment and once at the end of the experiment. The latter data were collected to identify scoring drift caused by the extended experiment duration.

After these three steps (RSRC selection, HRC identification, and session categorization), the images were renamed as follows:

$$\text{its4s2}_{(session)}(num)\text{-(RSRC)}_{(HRC)}.jpg$$

Where:

- (session) is the session name from Table 4
- (num) is a three digit number that uniquely identifies one image within one session

- (RSRC) is an RSRC name from Table 1 or Table 2
- (HRC) is an HRC name from Table 3

Appendix A contains the attribution information and licensing terms for each image. Take extreme care when selecting images from this dataset for use in publications, presentations, or demonstrations. Many of the images have constraints around attribution, commercial applications, or derivations. Where possible, public domain images were selected for the its4s2 dataset, in an attempt to minimize these use constraints.

Table 1. Entertainment RSRC Descriptions and Motivations

RSRC	Description	Motivation
Abstract	Abstract art, unusual shapes and lines	Demonstrate unusual shapes and lines that may be problematic for NR metrics and object recognition
Erratic	Waves, camp fires at night, and fireworks	Show objects that are difficult for video encoders, because they move erratically and change shape unexpectedly; these photos separate spatial and temporal response
Fauna	Animals	—
Flora	Plants and flowers	—
Food	Close view of food	Close shots with dim interior lighting
Historic	Historic buildings and antiques	Rounded shapes from older architecture; old buildings with artistic or aesthetic appeal
Humor	Funny pictures	Encourage metric outliers due to aesthetic appreciation
Indoors	Building interiors	Lighting and shapes typically encountered inside a modern building, including parquet floors
Landscape	Landscapes and caves	Long focal distances, typically shot in good lighting; includes many panoramas
Objects	Miscellaneous small and medium sized objects	—
Painting	Graffiti, paintings, scanned photos, wall hangings	Large flat objects, often with artistic or aesthetic appeal
People	Portrait, selfie, small groups of people	We know what people ought to look like, which increases the ability of the human visual system to perceive image quality problems
Sculpture	Sculptures and statues (e.g., snow, ice, stone, metal, plaster, sand, ceramic, glass)	Demonstrate camera capture problems associated with rendering details and shapes of unicolor surfaces
Sunset	Sunrise or sunset	Demonstrate the gradual changes in color that often show banding as the video compression bitrate falls; these photos separate camera response from the video compression issue
Text	Writing on various surfaces (e.g., paper, chalkboard, metal)	Include the implied task of reading the text; legibility may impact how people judge quality
Urban	Modern city architecture	Straight lines, usually with good 2D depth cues

RSRC	Description	Motivation
Vibrant	Highly saturated colors	Demonstrate highly saturated colors, which often have artistic or aesthetic appeal

Table 2. Public Safety RSRC Descriptions and Motivations

RSRC	Description	Motivation
Accident	Vehicle accidents, broken glass, and accident response training	Damaged vehicles and broken glass combine reflective surfaces with translucent glass or unicolor shapes, which cameras may have difficulty reproducing
Aerial	Aerial views, from airplanes and unmanned aerial vehicles (UAV)	Aerial views have long focal distances and unusual angles (from above); these photos separate the spatial and temporal response of UAV footage
Airplanes	Airplanes and sky divers	—
Assault	Training depicting practitioner response and assault training	—
Crowd	Crowds of people	Depict people at various sizes, including faces too small for face detection; separate spatial and temporal response of moving crowds
Disaster	Disaster sites (e.g., flood, bridge collapse, bombing, inclement weather)	—
Evidence	Evidence photos from first responders plus similar content; excludes prints and accidents	—
Fire	Active burns, charred remains from post fire investigation	Demonstrate problems encountered by firefighters, such as erratic shapes (see Table 1), obscurants (see Table 3) and problems with unicolor surfaces (e.g., poor focus, difficulty perceiving shapes and objects)
Hazmat	Hazardous material training or response	—
Infrared	Photos from an infrared camera	Demonstrate the overall green hue that is intentional (not a color error) and high levels of analog noise
Police	Law enforcement vehicles, law enforcement officers, and mixed response sites	—
Prints	Footprints, tire tracks, and fingerprints	Critical detail depicted with unicolor textures, often photographed at very close distances (e.g., some of the finger surface is out of focus); the impairment may be that the camera is not perpendicular to the footprint or tire track

Table 3. HRC Descriptions and Motivations

HRC	Description	Motivation
BeforeAfter	Two or three versions of the image (e.g., original plus manual post-processing, same situation photographed by different cameras, same camera with different settings)	Understand people's relative preferences; encourage NR metrics to mimic these preferences
Blur	Entire image or portions of the image are blurry, either intentionally (for effect) or unintentionally	Understand the difference between desirable and undesirable blur; training data for impairment specific NR parameters
Bokeh	Bokeh effect	Recognize and understand the Bokeh effect
Color	Unusual color properties, such as color errors, color shifts, saturated colors, or unsaturated colors	Encourage NR metrics that include meaningful color parameters (see [5])
Edge	High contrast edges, typically a strong black/white edge.	Demonstrate the strongest possible perceptual edge; ensure NR metric responds appropriately to very high contrast edges
Exposure	Exposure problems, including white level clipping and backlit objects	Training data for impairment specific NR parameters
Fisheye	Fisheye lenses and other lens distortions	Training data for impairment specific NR parameters, possibly as a pre-processing step
Lensflare	Lens flare	Training data for impairment specific NR parameters
Lowlight	Photography in low light situations, including indoors and dusk	Low quality images, to pin the lower end of the quality scale
Macro	Macro photography	Demonstrate focus problems, especially associated with law enforcement officers photographing fingers to obtain fingerprints.
Modified	Post-processed images	Provide out-of-scope cases that a camera capture NR metric is likely to encounter; the metric should degrade gracefully in response to unusual post-processing
Monochromatic	Monochromatic images, including black and white photography and subject matter depicting predominantly one color (e.g., shades of red or green)	NR metric should respond appropriately to both artistic black and white images (which we expect to have higher quality) and night vision camera (which we expect to have lower quality)
Night	Nighttime photography and scenes lit by two or more types of light (e.g., different color temperatures)	Low quality images, to pin the lower end of the quality scale
Obscurants	Airborne particulates obscure the image (e.g., haze, smoke, rain, snow, confetti)	Some cameras and video codecs respond poorly to airborne obscurants; these photos separate spatial and temporal response
Panorama	Panoramic images	Provide extreme aspect ratio differences between image and display; enable follow-on testing using panoramic images to simulate controlled pans

HRC	Description	Motivation
PanoramaError	Panoramic images with obvious errors (e.g., vertical banding, vignetting, ghosting, stitching errors, color shifts, curved horizons [4])	Provide a few examples of panoramic errors, as a precursor to follow-on experiments
Perspective	Scenes with obvious monoscopic depth-cues (e.g., relative size, texture gradient, occlusion, position relative to the horizon [5])	Training data for impairment specific NR parameters (i.e., evaluate quality based on monoscopic depth cues)
Shadows	Various shadows (e.g., deep shadows hide detail, scattered shadows obscure parts of images, shadows aid texture or shape detection)	Evaluate whether image quality benefits or suffers from the treatment of shadows.
Texture	Interesting textures (e.g., gravel, grass, feathers, parquet floors, dust on a chalkboard, tiny leaves, sand, wires, twigs, brick, shiny surfaces, sparks, dots, clouds, spraying water, fur, ripples, dirt, paint spatter, uneven surface under graffiti, fence)	Unusual textures may have unintended consequences for spatial filters; subjects may not care if these textures are not reproduced correctly
Tilt	Camera was tilted with respect to the horizon	Training data to accommodate perceptual impact of camera tilt (good or bad)
Translucent	Translucent surfaces (e.g., dirty glass, reflections on glass, water, and metal).	Demonstrate unusual camera problems stemming from translucent surfaces (e.g., object shape difficult to perceive)
Unicolor	Most of the image is one color, typically white or beige	Demonstrate ability of camera to distinguish among similar shades, compared to what user wants to see
Washedout	Image is pale, washed out	Training data for impairment specific NR parameters

Table 4. Session Descriptions

Session	Description
Aerial	Airplanes and aerial viewpoints from SC National Guard and SC Air National Guard, emphasizing shadows, night scenes, and camera problems
Assault	Assault training, firefighting, and various urban scenes from SC National Guard and SC Air National Guard, emphasizing shadows, night scenes, and camera problems
City	Scenes of modern cities from the VIME Image Dataset , emphasizing low quality night scenes and including two cameras photographing the same scene
Disaster	Disasters, hazmat, and people photos from SC National Guard and SC Air National Guard, including scans of old photos, with an emphasis on similar shades that may be difficult to distinguish
Evidence	Photos that might be evidence, including vehicle accidents, fingers close-up, footprints, broken glass, crowds and collapsed bridges; this session emphasizes camera variety
Fauna	Animals, food, campfires, and fireworks; emphasize camera problems and camera variety
Firefighters	Fire, bomb and disaster response by Manchester Fire; emphasis on shadows, night scenes, and camera problems

Session	Description
Landscape	Landscape scenes, with an emphasis on panorama images and high quality images
Places	People, places, events, and floors; emphasis on unusual shapes and textures, such as confetti, parquet floors, and fisheye lenses
PublicSafety	Mostly images photographed by public safety practitioners
Scrapbook	Photos typical of a family photo album, from the VIME Image Dataset ; emphasis on camera capture problems
Tourist	Photos of tourist attractions around the world, from the VIME Image Dataset ; emphasizes camera comparisons (i.e., two cameras photographing the same scene)
Travelogue	Photos by a world traveler, from the VIME Image Dataset ; emphasizes comparisons between camera capture and the photographer’s artistic intent, demonstrated via post processing; includes the photographer’s opinions about camera capture problems
Vibrant	Graffiti, humor, small objects, snow sculptures, and photos with vibrant colors; emphasizes color, shape and artistic intent

2.2 Other Image Selection Considerations

All images in the City, Scrapbook, Tourist and Travelogue sessions and some images in the PublicSafety session were extracted from the VIME Image Dataset on Flickr [6]. This dataset of public domain images was created by the Video Quality Experts Group (VQEG) as an endeavor of the Video and Image Models for Consumer Content Evaluation (VIME) working group. The VIME group was closed in November 2017 and replaced with the No Reference Metric (NORM) working group, when interest shifted to NR metric development. The images in the VIME Image Dataset were chosen by a variety of video quality experts, photographers, and end users specifically for the purpose of characterizing and investigating consumer grade camera capture. The its4s2 dataset contains a subset of the VIME Image Dataset that emphasizes unrepeated scenes. Most of the images depicting the same scene with multiple cameras are omitted from the its4s2 dataset.

The its4s2 dataset implements an experiment design with unrepeated scenes [7]. The its4s dataset focuses primarily on unique images—1099 images depict a scene that is only photographed once. The 374 images associated with the BeforeAfter HRC contains sets of related content—two or three images depicting the same scene. These may be a scene photographed by multiple cameras, a scene photographed by the same camera with different settings, or an image as captured by the camera plus a post-processed variant. The exact relationship among such images is not identified. The BeforeAfter images are intended to provide NR metric developers with insights into people’s quality preferences.

Some of the BeforeAfter images depict post-processing. These original and post-processed image sets cannot, strictly speaking, be considered “unrepeated.” In particular, the Travelogue session contains 54 images that compare what the camera produced with and without manual post processing. The post processed images demonstrate what the photographer wanted. Note that all photos in the Travelogue session were produced by one photographer. A small number of post-processed images appear in other sessions.

Sessions Aerial, Assault, Disaster, Evidence, Firefighters and PublicSafety contain images produced by first responders or, occasionally, containing similar subject matter. The subject matter in these images was chosen based on feedback from first responders [8]. These images are insufficient to characterize the diverse subject matter and camera problems encountered by first responders. Many of these images are taken from South Carolina National Guard (USA), South Carolina Air National Guard (USA) and Manchester Fire (UK), due to their generosity in making large sets of images available on Flickr with “public domain” license terms.

The its4s2 dataset mostly contains images that demonstrate the range of quality responses from consumer grade camera capture. There are four exceptions as described below.

First, some images are intentionally outside of that scope, to ensure that an NR metric designed on this dataset will have robust response to unexpected stimuli. An example is a scanned image depicting a faded analog photograph: the sepia tint and fading are atypical of modern cameras.

Second, some images were selected specifically to stress NR metrics, either due to the photographer’s choices, the camera’s response, some aspect of human perception, or a hypothesized type of NR metric that might be trained on the dataset. The Abstract RSRC listed in Table 1 provides an example. Abstract shapes may cause object recognition algorithms to fail, because there is no object to be recognized. Abstract line patterns may cause atypical edge energy patterns.

Third, some images were selected to enable later subjective experiments that build upon its4s2. For example, images in the Erratic RSRC and Obscurant HRC become more interesting and challenging in the presence of motion (e.g., fire, water, falling confetti). Likewise, the Panorama RSRC images could be used to simulate controlled pans, to explore the relationship between pan speed and perceived quality.

Fourth, some images were chosen specifically for their aesthetic appeal, artistry and beauty. These images are intended to encourage NR metrics to consider such factors. Aesthetically appealing images will help researchers understand the discrepancy between the engineering viewpoint (which ignores aesthetics) and the consumer’s viewpoint (where aesthetics are a confounding factor). An engineer might want an NR metric that analyzes tradeoffs between two specific factors (e.g., bit-rate vs resolution) and neither predicts nor detects aesthetic problems (e.g., composition, color scheme). Consumers merge the quality response of the camera, the photographer, and the scene into an overall quality assessment.

3. SUBJECTIVE TESTING, POST PROCESSING AND MOS ANALYSIS

3.1 Subjective Testing

As recommended by ITU-T Rec. P.913, pilot testing was conducted using six U.S. Department of Commerce employees. The pilot testing did not identify any problems with the experiment (e.g., stimuli duration, total test duration, instructions, software, laptops, environment). The pilot testers indicated that the test duration was acceptable, and that the content variety helped counteract tedium. The pilot test data are not made available.

The its4s2 experiment was conducted according to ITU-T Rec. P.913 using the absolute category rating (ACR) scale. The five levels were identified by the terms specified in ITU-T Rec. P.913 (i.e., excellent, good, fair, poor, and bad). The “skip” option from its4s [1] was not available in the control software, and so was omitted.

Before subjective testing, the images were resized to the test laptop’s display size, 1920×1080 . Each image was resized (up-sampled or down-sampled) as if the viewer was viewing the image in full screen mode. If the image did not have a 16:9 aspect ratio, then black was added to the top and bottom or to the left and right. The image was then converted into a 4 second video, by frame repetition. Subjects viewed and rated these still videos.

The subjective testing was conducted on laptops with 1920×1080 monitors, as noted above. Each laptop screen was 6” vertically, 11” horizontally, and 12.5” diagonally. Subjects self-selected a comfortable viewing distance of roughly 3 to 4 picture heights (no measurements were taken). Four identical laptops were used, so that four subjects could participate simultaneously. All four laptops had touchscreens and could fold into a tablet configuration. Subjects were offered styluses. The subjective test itself was controlled by the AVRRate [9] software. The AVRRate software interface was slightly awkward, because that version of AVRRate was not intended for an experiment with many sessions. This did not impact the cycle of displaying and rating images. Subjects filled out a questionnaire after completing the experiment.

Sixteen subjects were obtained from a local temporary placement agency. These subjects performed the experiment in our lab, which is a quiet room with a north facing window. The test implementer read aloud the instructions given in Appendix A. Most subjects completed the entire test in 3 to 3.5 hours. A few subjects required longer, and no one needed more than 4 hours. Most subjects used a stylus, a few subjects used a computer mouse, and one subject stood at a tall table. Of the 16 subjects, 3 were male and 13 were female.

3.2 Subject Evaluation Questionnaire

The its4s2 experiment questionnaire requested the following information:

- Gender
- Age
- Whether the subject was a first responder
- Whether the subject was an experienced photographer

- Whether the subject had knowledge of first responder camera needs
- Self-assessment of the subject’s vision (excellent, good, fair, poor, bad)
- The type of camera used most often (e.g., phone, tablet, point-and-shoot, DSLR)
- Frequency of on-the-job camera or photo use
- Frequency of personal camera or image use (e.g., hobby, family photos)
- Ideas for helpful warnings or advice that a hypothetical future camera could provide, after analyzing the quality of its images
- Quality problems experienced with their own images
- Duration of their participation in this experiment
- What they liked about this experiment
- What they disliked and suggestions for improvement
- Whether dividing images into sessions by subject matter was helpful or harmful

The exact wording of each question and responses are available in the questionnaire spreadsheet on CDVL.

3.3 Analysis of Lab Subject Data

Figure 1 shows a histogram of the Pearson correlations between each subject’s opinion scores and the overall MOS, computed over all subjects. The two subjects with lower correlations are ID023 with 0.52 and ID021 with 0.59. These low correlations could reflect genuine differences of opinion, due to atypical experiment design choices.

Figure 2 plots MOS versus standard deviation of opinion scores (SOS), for both the raw data and after removing the overall bias from each subject’s data, as recommended by Janowski and Pinson [10]. That is, we subtract from each opinion score the difference between a subject’s average score and the average of all lab subject scores. This datum is denoted MOS’ and SOS’, respectively. Note that this typically reduces SOS but does not impact MOS values.

Figure 3 shows the biases of each subject for each session, computed on the raw data. Figure 4 shows these session biases after overall subject bias is removed. With overall bias removed, it is easier to see trends in subject biases per session. Conventional experiment balance content and quality among sessions, so it is of interest to see if the its4s2 session content variations cause different subject scoring behaviors.

We performed the Jarque-Bera test for normality on each session’s distribution of subject biases, after the overall subject bias had been removed. Thus, the input to this test is shown in Figure 4. The Jarque-Bera test was chosen because the null hypothesis is that the skewness is zero and kurtosis is 3. The Jarque-Bera test allows us to detect outliers, indicative in the present context of a subject liking or disliking a particular session’s content (i.e., the subject’s bias for one session differs from their bias for the entire its4s2 experiment). Subject ID021 failed the Jarque-Bera test for normality. When testing by session instead of by subject, the Places and Tourist sessions failed the Jarque-Bera test. These sessions have a normal distribution when subject ID021 is removed from the data. These results match what we see in Figure 4—subject ID021 is an outlier in the Places and Tourist session histograms.

Recall that its4s2 included two training sessions: one with entertainment content and one with public safety content. Subjects rated these sessions both at the introduction to the experiment and at the end, to conclude the experiment. Figure 5 shows the Pearson correlation between each subject's scores during the introduction and conclusion sessions. Subject ID016's unusually low correlation of 0.42 is due to the limited range of scores during both the introduction and conclusion sessions—38 of the 44 images were rated good or fair by that subject.

Based on these analyses, we believe all lab subjects' data should be retained. The atypical elements of the experiment design do not support removing subjects ID016, ID021 or ID023. Their scores seem to indicate genuine differences of opinion.

4. DATASET DISTRIBUTION

The its4s2 dataset is available on the Consumer Digital Video Library (CDVL, www.cdvl.org) for research and development purposes. CDVL provides:

- The images in this dataset (JPEG files)
- Spreadsheet with image attribution and licensing terms (MS-Excel file)
- 4 second videos depicting the images scaled to the test tablet and compressed for playback to subjects
- Subjective ratings (comma separated value (CSV) file)
- Questionnaire responses (CSV file)

The its4s2 dataset is intended specifically to inspire innovative NR metric development around camera capture. The experiment design emphasizes a large variety of unrepeated images, displayed as short duration, still video sequences (4 seconds).

APPENDIX A INSTRUCTIONS

The instructions in this appendix were read verbally to subjects, from the script below. The instructions contain alternatives, for example depending on whether the subject would rate all sessions or not.

“Thank you for coming in to participate in our study. The purpose of this study is to gather individual perceptions of the quality of photographs. This will help us to understand consumer cameras.

You will be presented with photographs and then asked to judge their quality on a scale of excellent, good, fair, poor, or bad. After you have rated the photo, click on the “Play” button to continue—or don’t, to pause the test briefly.

Please rate the quality of photographs rather than the subject matter, and try to ignore your preconceived notions of today’s cameras. Everything else you see should be considered. Do not worry about somehow giving the wrong answer; there is no right or wrong answer. Everyone's opinion will be slightly different. We simply want to record your opinion.

Whole Experiment	Partial Experiment
The photographs are divided into 18 short sessions. Each session contains similar subject matter, like landscapes or disasters. 14 of the session take around 12 minutes. The first two and last two sessions are much shorter, around 2 minutes each.	This experiment is divided into many sessions, each about 12 minutes long. Each session contains similar subject matter, like landscapes or disasters. You will participate in a subset of the available sessions.

Broadly speaking there are two session themes: entertainment and public safety. We want you to adopt a slightly different mindset for each theme. The entertainment sessions portray how consumers typically use cameras, like vacation photos. During entertainment sessions, pretend you or a friend took this photograph for your personal use.

First Responders	Everyone Else
The public safety sessions portray how first responders use cameras. During the public safety sessions, pretend you are using these images for your job. We realize that these photographs are an imperfect simulation of the subject matter that first responders photograph. At the end of this experiment, I would appreciate your advice on subject matter for future experiments.	The public safety sessions portray how first responders use cameras. Here are some examples: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The courts examine photos of a crime scene • Investigators pause a surveillance video, to identify a suspect or track a vehicle • A state emergency response center assesses a disaster hundreds of miles away • An emergency room doctor looks at an accident, to understand the forces involved and potential internal injuries During the public safety sessions, pretend you are a first responder who is using these images for evidence or situational awareness. Note that some of these public safety photographs depict training sessions with simulated injuries.

Do you have any questions before we begin?

You will use this laptop to rate the photographs. These laptops have touchscreens and fold flat, into a tablet format. Choose the configuration that you prefer: mouse or the touchscreen, laptop or tablet, hand-held or resting on the table. You may change the laptop configuration at any time during the experiment.

Video Lab	Elsewhere
You may use that tall table, if you prefer to stand.

The laptop's desktop is pale gray. The "AVRate" icon with the green circle is the subjective test software. Double-click on AVRate to start each session in turn. Ignore the subject ID number at the top of the screen; and the settings pulldown at the bottom of the screen. We aren't using those.

Select the three dots to the right of "playlist.lst" to select your first session. Your session lists are numbered 1 through 18. The file names include your ID number and the session name. The public safety themed sessions include the initials "PSCR." Select session 1 now. This is a short session of entertainment photos.

Use this paper next to you to keep track of the sessions you have finished. Unfortunately, AVRate will not remember which sessions you have completed. If you skip or repeat a session, let us know. We can fix this problem.

As a reminder, your task is to rate the quality of each image as it appears right now. You will see each photograph for 4 seconds, and then the rating scale will appear. By "quality" we mean your judgement of the photograph. If you took this photograph, would you keep it or put it in the trash? If you were shopping for a new camera, would you want this camera or would you see what else is available? Ignore your opinion of the subject, for example whether you like or dislike cats, but everything else you see should be considered. It is valid to consider the focus, framing, and if you can't figure out what the image depicts.

Press "OK" to begin with a small sampling of entertainment photographs; then press "play" to see the first image.

After each session finishes, AVRate will exit. Take a break, or double-click on the AVRate icon to start the next session. You take a break at any time, by rating an image but waiting to press play. After the last session (number 18), you will fill out a short questionnaire.

Please restart AVRate and select the playlist for session 2. This is a short session of public safety photos. I will be here with you throughout the experiment."

APPENDIX B ATTRIBUTION AND USAGE RIGHTS

This appendix contains the attribution and license information for each image in the its4s2 dataset. Table B-2 through Table B-16 each contain the attribution and license terms for the images in one session. This information is also available in a Microsoft Excel™ spreadsheet (“its4s2_photo_attribution.xlsx”) that is distributed with the images on the Consumer Digital Video Library (CDVL, www.cdvl.org). Table B-1 defines each column in the attribution tables and spreadsheet. The last five rows described in Table B-1 contain supplementary information columns that appear in the spreadsheet but not Table B-2 through Table B-16.

Caution is advised when displaying or distributing these images (e.g., conference papers, presentations, technical demonstrations). The use of each image is constrained by the original attribution and licensing terms.

Table B-1. Attribution and License Term Table Description

Column Title	Description
Image File Name	Name of the image file within the its4s dataset. This image has been renamed but the file is otherwise unchanged.
License	Creative Commons license terms
Flickr User Name	User name on Flickr, usually linked to that user’s Flickr webpage
Title	Title of the image on Flickr
Accessed	Date we accessed the image
Web Link	Flickr webpage where the image was found
Original File Name	Name of the image file as provided by Flickr.
Source	Source of the image: Flickr or VIME Image Dataset on Flickr
Camera	Camera reported by the image or the Flickr webpage
RSRC	RSRC categorization from Table 1 or Table 2
HRC	HRC categorization from Table 3

15. ABSTRACT (A 200-word or less factual summary of most significant information. If document includes a significant bibliography or literature survey, mention it here.) This technical memorandum provides technical details for the image quality subjective experiment its4s2. This experiment contains 1,473 still images that were presented to subjects for 4 seconds each, as per still video. The goals are (1) to train no-reference (NR) metrics that track the image quality of consumer grade cameras, (2) to understand spatial characteristics of moving objects that have complex interactions with video codecs, such as water and confetti, and (3) to begin to identify any differences in rating behaviors depending on whether the images are used for entertainment purposes or by public safety practitioners for job related tasks. The dataset is freely available for research and development purposes.

NTIA FORMAL PUBLICATION SERIES

NTIA MONOGRAPH (MG)

A scholarly, professionally oriented publication dealing with state-of-the-art research or an authoritative treatment of a broad area. Expected to have long-lasting value.

NTIA SPECIAL PUBLICATION (SP)

Conference proceedings, bibliographies, selected speeches, course and instructional materials, directories, and major studies mandated by Congress.

NTIA REPORT (TR)

Important contributions to existing knowledge of less breadth than a monograph, such as results of completed projects and major activities.

JOINT NTIA/OTHER-AGENCY REPORT (JR)

This report receives both local NTIA and other agency review. Both agencies' logos and report series numbering appear on the cover.

NTIA SOFTWARE & DATA PRODUCTS (SD)

Software such as programs, test data, and sound/video files. This series can be used to transfer technology to U.S. industry.

NTIA HANDBOOK (HB)

Information pertaining to technical procedures, reference and data guides, and formal user's manuals that are expected to be pertinent for a long time.

NTIA TECHNICAL MEMORANDUM (TM)

Technical information typically of less breadth than an NTIA Report. The series includes data, preliminary project results, and information for a specific, limited audience.

For information about NTIA publications, contact the NTIA/ITS Technical Publications Office at 325 Broadway, Boulder, CO, 80305 Tel. (303) 497-3572 or e-mail ITSinfo@ntia.gov.
